

NEXT TIME I'LL KNOW BETTER
or The Round Mound Mystery

© 2012 by Freaky Dude Books (www.freakydudebooks.com)

This quiz is presented, for better or worse,
As a TRUE-FALSE exercise, written in verse.

- T F 1. If your room resembles a disaster scene,
Your mom might demand that you get your place clean.
- T F 2. In the poem all that dirt and all that lint
Is in close proximity to a chocolate mint.
- T F 3. These verses provide ample evidence that
This house has a dog and also a cat.
- T F 4. In this room maintained with such love and joy
Most readers will assume its owner is a boy.
- T F 5. But you have to consider — it might make you wanna hurl —
That this room's inhabitant could be a girl.
- T F 6. In a poem of such beauty with images sublime
Its verses have each second and fourth lines rhyme.
- T F 7. This place is kind of filthy with lots of grime and grit.
Few would pay big money to live in it.
- T F 8. The moral of this story is: To prevent a scare,
Be mindful of the place you stash your underwear.
- T F 9. The writer's aim is clear. With grossness spread so thick
His poem is intended to make the reader sick.
- T F 10. With poetry so brilliant, the verdict is clear:
Daniel Berenson surpasses William Shakespeare.